WASHINGTON COMMANDERS LAUNCH COLLABORATIVE MERCHANDISE LINES WITH LOCAL BLACK-OWNED BUSINESSES

Partnerships With The Museum DC and DC Proper Will Build Community and Enhance Team's Offering of Street Wear and Culture Reflecting the DMV

LANDOVER, Md., November 3, 2022 – The Washington Commanders recently announced two exciting partnerships with local Black-owned clothing retailers. The partnerships with The Museum DC, a local Black-owned clothing boutique that transforms fashion and pop culture into art, and DC PROPER®, who boldly pays homage to DC's unique history, will build on the Burgundy and Gold's creative ties to the DMV community.

"The Museum DC and DC PROPER are stewards of the city's rich sports and fashion culture. We take pride in our local community and are excited to showcase these entrepreneurs' great work," said Jason Wright, Washington Commanders President. "We are committed to serving our diverse fan base by delivering the merchandise they want from the creators who make our community truly unique and special."

Founded in 2015 by LeGreg Harrison and Muhammed Hill, The Museum DC has served as a space for emerging artists and creatives to showcase their works. Earlier this month, the Commanders debuted The Museum DC's new polo shirts for guest services staff, making them the first local Black business to design guest services wear for an NFL franchise. "It was surreal, us being able to partner together. The way that we both have affected the community ... I knew that it would just be a happy marriage," Harrison said of the partnership in a recent WUSA9 news segment.

DC PROPER was created by Michael Warren, co-founder of the A Life Well Dressed Company, a fourth generation Washington DC Native inspired to unite and connect the city through style, sports, culture, and history. Newly designed items in partnership with the Commanders include references to Washington's four quadrants, the iconic cherry blossoms, and the District's flag.

"My love for my hometown and being asked "Where are you from?" everywhere I lived inspired me to create DC PROPER, and my family's love for the legacy of the Commanders made this partnership the most iconic way to celebrate the brand and city, the District of Champions," added Warren.

Apparel from the collaborations can be found on DC Proper's online store and at The Museum DC's retail store in Northeast DC and online. Merchandise from both partnerships can also be found at the Washington Commanders Fanatics online shop. The Washington Commander's partnership with The Museum DC officially launched on October 9th. Designs from the team's new line with DC Proper were launched on November 3rd at The Team Store.
